we use a new panel dataset of credit card accounts to analyze how consumers responded to the 2001 federal income tax rebates we estimate the monthly response of credit card payments spending and debt exploiting the unique randomized timing of the rebate disbursement we find that on average consumers initially saved some of the rebate by increasing their credit card payments and thereby paying down debt but soon afterwards their spending increased counter to the canonical permanent income model spending rose most for consumers who were initially most likely to be liquidity constrained whereas debt declined most so saving rose most for unconstrained consumers more generally the results suggest that there can be important dynamics in consumers response to lumpy increases in income like tax rebates working in part through balance sheet liquidity mechanisms
