written by a team of mit internet specialists, this comprehensive reference teaches webmasters and developers how to choose, select and implement the right search engine for their intranet or large internet site. the book also describes and compares the most popular search engines and directories, explains their ranking systems and teaches how users can get best results.

text mining offers a way for individuals and corporations to exploit the vast amount of information available on the internet. text mining application programming teaches developers about the problems of managing unstructured text and describes how to build tools for text mining using standard statistical methods from artificial intelligence and operations research. these tools can be used for a variety of fields including law, business and medicine. key topics covered include information extraction, clustering, text categorization, searching, the summarization and natural language query systems. the book explains the theory behind each topic and algorithm and then provides a practical solution implementation with which developers and students can experiment. a wide variety of code is also included for developers to build their own custom solutions. after reading through this book, developers will be able to tap into the bevy of information available online in ways they never thought possible and students will have a thorough understanding of the theory and practical application of text mining.

the study of infant memory has flourished in the past decade for a number of reasons, not the least of which is the tremendous growth of interest in normal and pathological adult memory that began in the late fifties. despite its common lineage to other areas of memory research, however, infant memory has perhaps been the least integrated into the mainstream. in reading the literature, one gets a sense of discontinuity between the study of infant memory and memory at all other stages of development from childhood to old age. the reasons for this are not hard to find: the techniques used to study memory in infants are usually very different from those typically used even in children. these techniques often limit the kind of inferences one can draw about the nature of the memory systems under investigation even when terms concepts and theories from the adult literature are applied to infants they often bear only a loose relationship to their original usage for example an infant who stares longer at a new pattern than an old one is said to recognize the old one and to have a memory system that shares many characteristics with a memory system that makes recognition possible in adults similarly an infant who emits a previously learned response such as a leg kick to an old stimulus is said to recall that response and to be engaged in processes similar to those of adults who are recalling past events
