perhaps because i grew up on a farm in ohio i have long been interested in rural development although i fll st became a migrant at the age of 17 when i left the farm to continue my studies in a city college i was not aware of the relation between rural development and migration until many years later when i began studying patterns of urban and rural poverty this research has grown out of my continuing investigation of the ways that migration has been seen as both a response to chronic conditions of rural poverty and a factor potentially exacerbating urban poverty conditions if governments wanted to deal with urban poverty they would want to restrict urban in migration yet if they reduced urban in migration this would remove one of the important means available to persons seeking to raise themselves out of rural impoverishment this would clearly be a no win situation for the rural poor the only way to deal fairly with both urban and rural poverty would be to foster socio economic development of rural areas thus i became interested in studying the patterns of rural development which actually have had an effect on the migration decisions of rural families an under examined question for social scientists is whether migrant communities are less likely to support institutions for managing common pool resources as common property a significant body of literature suggests that a high rate of migration undermines institutional processes in local communities however the likelihood of successful common property institutions in migrant communities remains poorly understood for example although prominent explanations emphasize the past based determinants of collective action for common property management such as the core relationships of reputation trust and reciprocity some studies suggest that new immigrant communities with no prior interactions can support institutions for managing common resources in this article i hypothesize that new immigrant communities are less likely to engage in the collective action of supporting common property institutions for forestry resource management accordingly such collective action is engendered by relationships of reputation trust and reciprocity those core relationships are developed through communal interactions over long periods and new immigrant communities have not had time to engage in such interactions as to develop the core relationships to test these hypotheses i use mixed method research design to study efforts at locally supporting national forestry regulations among ugandan communities with varying proportions of immigrants and prospective out migrants that are confronting the degradation of adjacent forest reserves evidence from survey data on 293 randomly selected heads of households suggests that immigrant communities are less likely to support forestry regulations specifically new immigrant communities with low prospects of out migrating are less supportive of forestry regulations than old communities with low prospects of out migrating also there is no significant difference in support for forestry regulations between new immigrant communities with low prospects of out migrating and transitory communities with high prospects of out migrating by implication migrant communities are less supportive of common property institutions because their past based experiences exert more influence on such support than their future based expectations all contributions to this book to this volume describe women as social actors within specific migration processes and point out women s creativity in shaping migrant settings this perspective counter balances common descriptions of women as more or less invisible and dependent of male migration at the same time the anthropological approach ensures the careful consideration and analysis of the culturally specific contexts within which the different processes of migration are taking place regional and cultural diversity of the data presented renders possible intercultural comparison of the investigated phenomena the arrival of immigrants on america s shores has always posed a singular problem once they are here how are these diverse peoples to be transformed into americans the americanization movement of the 1910s and 1920s addressed this challenge by seeking to train immigrants for citizenship representing a key element of the progressives search for order in a modernizing america frank van nuys examines for the first time how this movement in an effort to help integrate an unruly west into the emerging national system was forced to reconcile the myth of rugged individualism with the demands of a planned society in an era convulsed by world war and socialist revolution the americanization movement was especially concerned about the susceptibility of immigrants to un american propaganda and union agitation as van nuys convincingly demonstrates this applied as much to immigrants in the urbanizing and industrializing west as it did to those occupying the ethnic enclaves of cities in the east in americanizing the west he tells how hundreds of bureaucrats educators employers and reformers participated in this movement by developing adult immigrant education programs and how these attempts contributed more toward bureaucratizing the west than it did to turning immigrants into productive citizens he deftly ties this history to broader national developments and shows how westerners brought distinctive approaches to americanization to accommodate and preserve their own sense of history and identity van nuys shows that although racism and social control agendas permeated americanization efforts in the west americanizers sustained their faith in education as a powerful force in transforming immigrants into productive citizens he also shows how some westerners especially in california believed they faced a racial frontier unlike other parts of the country in light of the influx of hispanics and asians so that westerners became major players in the crafting of not only american identity but also immigration policies the mystique of the white pioneer past still maintains a powerful hold on ideas of american identity and we still deal with many of these issues through laws and propositions targeting immigrants and alien workers americanizing the west makes a clear case for regional distinctiveness in this citizenship program and puts current headlines in perspective by showing how it helped make the west what it is today focuses on the features of immigrant receiving societies as determinants of successful incorporation of immigrants these features include preexisting ethnic and race relations in the host societies labor markets and related institutions government programs and policies and changing international boundaries associated with the process of globalization how will criminal justice react to terrorism in this book some hard questions are asked about how terrorism is organized supported and financed and what this will mean for the security of nations and international systems topics include the international criminal court suicidal terrorism counter terrorism the use of the internet by terrorist organizations and a profile of american terrorist timothy mcveigh this volume is essential to understanding the political climate of the new millennium
