law is a discourse of absolutes and yet it is beset by ambiguities legality is inevitably identified with morality and yet there is in all legal systems a zone where the legal and the non legal become hard to distinguish and where it is debatable how far the moral and social standing of particular groups or individuals can be equated with their legal status anthropology is typically concerned with the frontiers of legality and with groups defined by the law as marginal inside and outside the law reflects on the ambiguities of law s authority drawing on comparative case studies of ethnic groups within different modern states of groups defined as marginal through their sexual behaviour and on analyses of the ambiguities at the heart of state authority itself inside and outside the law will be of interest to political scientists and legal theorists as well as anthropologists and sociologists concerned with popular conceptions of the state and its laws design and anthropology challenges conventional thinking regarding the nature of design and creativity in a way that acknowledges the improvisatory skills and perceptual acuity of people combining theoretical investigations and documentation of practice based experiments it addresses methodological questions concerning the re conceptualisation of the relation between design and use from both theoretical and practice based positions concerned with what it means to draw users into processes of designing and producing this book emphasises the creativity of design and the emergence of objects in social situations and collaborative endeavours organised around the themes of perception and the user producer skilled practices of designing and using and the relation between people and things the book contains the latest work of researchers from academia and industry to enhance our understanding of ethnographic practice and develop a research agenda for the emergent field of design anthropology drawing together work from anthropologists philosophers designers engineers scholars of innovation and theatre practitioners design and anthropology will appeal to anthropologists and to those working in the fields of design and innovation and the philosophy of technology and engineering making and growing brings together the latest work in the fields of anthropology and material culture studies to explore the differences and the relation between making things and growing things and between things that are made and things that grow though the former are often regarded as artefacts and the latter as organisms the book calls this distinction into question examining the implications for our understanding of materials design and creativity grounding their arguments in case studies from different regions and historical periods the contributors to this volume show how making and growing give rise to co produced and mutually modifying organisms and artefacts including human persons they attend to the properties of materials and to the forms of knowledge and sensory experience involved in these processes and explore the dynamics of making and undoing growing and decomposition the book will be of broad interest to
