this book offers a resolution of the paradox posed by the pleasure of tragedy by returning to its earliest articulations in archaic greek poetry and its subsequent emergence as a philosophical problem in plato's republic socrates claim that tragic poetry satisfies our hunger for tears hearkens back to archaic conceptions of both poetry and mourning that suggest a common source of pleasure in the human appetite for heightened forms of emotional distress by unearthing a psychosomatic model of aesthetic engagement implicit in archaic poetry and philosophically elaborated by plato this volume not only sheds new light on the republic's notorious indictment of poetry but also identifies rationally and ethically disinterested sources of value in our pursuit of aesthetic states in doing so the book resolves an intractable paradox in aesthetic theory and human psychology the appeal of painful emotions this book opens up a new way of reading classical literary texts appropriate both to the needs and competencies of today's university students and also it is argued to the classic texts themselves the texts rich linguistic fabric is constructed out of the play of issues and character of action and of evaluation a play that is quickly lost in translation the solution offered is not the traditional one of ever more intensive language teaching rather the book argues for the provision of texts glossed with key words to enable students to create engaged critical readings for themselves to read through rather than in translation
