in our western criminal justice system the accused has a right to a fair trial and legal representation but the victim does not consedine argues that the victim must be incorporated into the process so the transgressor can face up to their wrongdoing and the wronged find proper healing

we have all been hurt by someone in some cases very seriously and we have all inflicted pain on someone else even if it was unintended the consequences have often been devastating and continue to this day we find ourselves stuck in anger fear isolation disbelief bitterness self blame denial guilt or shame our friends and family plead with us to move on and put the past behind us but it s never that simple there is no magic wand that can instantly sweep away this kind of pain so what can we do how can we find some peace is it possible to heal from what has happened would some kind of punishment make a difference do we need to forgive would an apology help how can we find a way out of this agonising hurt and negativity will it ever be possible to make things right beyond harm explores all of these questions and offers a way forward the first part looks at what it means to be wronged and why it hurts so much it sets out an explanation for why we react to wrongdoing in the ways that we do so many of which only cause us more suffering and pain and it offers an alternative a kind of justice that can bring the healing and peace that we crave this is a response that honours our moral values and acknowledges our common humanity it is also evidence based it takes seriously how we actually think and feel about wrongdoing the second part builds on the first by exploring what it would take for this alternative to become a reality it shows how it is possible to make things right by using a tried and tested practice called restorative justice and what is needed for this approach to be safe and effective justice for aboriginal peoples in an urban context is a complex issue which should involve consideration of healing tradition and community but rarely does in his analysis of justice issues facing urban aboriginals proulx pays particular attention to the situation of aboriginal peoples in canada and how the current justice system has failed them he looks at alternatives to the current system examining in detail the community council project ccp an aboriginal run diversion program in toronto the analysis of the ccp shows how effective culturally appropriate alternative justice mechanisms can provide justice for those not well served by the current system describing and analyzing an alternative way of thinking about crime and justice is at the heart of this timely and far reaching book proulx shows how justice healing and community intersect drawing on the example of the ccp he discusses what constitutes the aboriginal community in toronto and how the ccp is playing an important role in shaping and defining the community among other issues addressed in the book are crime causation indigenous justice knowledge and practice healing changes in tradition and culture and personal and community ownership and empowerment
